

Jennifer Winsa Charles, M.D.

Dr. Charles is a board-certified anesthesiologist and has been an Assistant Professor at NYU since 2016. She received her medical doctorate degree from New Jersey Medical School and completed her residency training in anesthesiology at the University of Miami. During her final year of residency, she was selected to be the department's chief resident. She went on to complete a fellowship in Regional Anesthesiology and Acute Pain Management at the Hospital for Special Surgery (HSS) in Manhattan, NY.

Since joining the department at NYU Langone Health, Dr. Charles has displayed a dedication to academic excellence, complemented by her reliability in community involvement. Her passion for global health initiatives was born during her time at HSS when she volunteered to serve on a medical mission in Haiti by providing otherwise unavailable orthopedic surgical procedures to patients in medical need.

As an Avid proponent of diversity in healthcare Dr. Charles has serves on the NYU medical school admissions committee to ensure fair screening and evaluation of minority candidates. In her time, when she is not spending quality time with her daughter, Dr. Charles is volunteering for SEED as a mentor to medical students at NYU.
